

Free Positioning Report

Positioning is the sentence a reader repeats when they recommend you to someone else. This guide walks you through the nine questions we ask, then shows you how to fold the answers into a single page you can use everywhere.

The nine questions

- Who is the one reader you are writing for, described as a person and not a demographic.
- What do they already believe before they meet your work.
- What do you want them to believe afterwards.
- What is the promise you can keep every single time.
- What are you deliberately not for.
- Which three proof points make the promise credible.
- What does the reader do next, in one clear action.
- Which words do you want associated with your name.
- Which words do you refuse.

Turning answers into one page

- Open with the promise in a single sentence of no more than twenty words.
- Follow with three proof lines: a result, a recognition and a reader quote.
- Close with the action and where it leads.
- Read it aloud. If you stumble, the sentence is still carrying two ideas.

Where to use it

- The opening of your book description and your website header.
- Your author bio, your speaker one sheet and your media pitches.
- The first thirty seconds of every interview.
